Temple Day : Pre Rup

This is the temple with the leaning tower on the corner. The road to Preah Dak and Banteay Srey goes around two side of the Pre Rup temple. Pre Rup, like most temples, faces east and the early sun makes the towers stand out. The (nearly full) moon setting added some interest.

We went straight up the east stairs to the top platform (quite a challenge for my little legs and my age!).

The guard lions facing east at the top platform (no safety barrier at all).

I guess we could have used these wooden stairs on the north side of the temple.

There are five towers along the front of the temple. This is looking up inside the fourth from the left... on an angle.

These are the three left front towers and you can see the lean of the first tower.

There is a worker on it. He has a hard hat, but no shoes. There is a rope over the top of the little bump of the tower. They are there to clear away the vegetation.
