

Part 22 Europe for Cathy's blog

Friday 25th April, 2025. Anzac Day

After another good breakfast, busier now at the hotel, we headed off to the market.

It's a beautiful building outside, but more like a warehouse on the inside. It might be quite touristy, but there were people buying meat and vegetables and fruit as well as paprika.

Those are strings of dried chilies hanging.

Here is a pretty lavender shop.

Upstairs was half food (eateries) and half tourist souvenirs, including scarves, soft toys, t-shirts and leather goods (which smelled nice).

We crossed the Danube over this bridge (called the Liberty Bridge, or the Freedom Bridge).

We found these tulips in a public park (probably the last days of tulips until next season...we won't see any again for a long while!).

More walking and more beautiful buildings and their wrought iron work.

You can rent (space in) this building for a public exhibition.

After a delicious danish and coffee (our late lunch), we ended up here, not to visit but to sit in the gardens and watch the people.

Tea was in a small “pub”, run by some young men and we had goulash and bread and salad (and chips).
