

Kuala Lumpur

Part 8 for Cathy's blog : Kuala Lumpur holiday

Sunday 27th September, 2026.

Another day of finding our way around Kuala Lumpur.

Today, we caught the underground train in to Pasar Seni.
Easy to translate that.

You buy tickets at machines. You press English, to make life easier. You pick the station you want to go to, pick the number of tickets and pay money (coins, notes or by card or phone). Less than 5RM for two tokens (like plastic counters).

The token is scanned to let you through the turnstile into the platforms.

You find your platform and wait for the train (driverless, stops automatically, doors open on the train and on the station platform automatically).

Plenty of room for standing (not so much for sitting).

Stations are announced and you need to listen carefully to follow which station you are up to. The stations themselves are clearly labelled and easy to read and follow.

The train stops for about two minutes at each station, so there is plenty of time to get on and off.

Your tokens let's you out through the turnstiles.

It is a short walk from Pasar Seni to the Central Market.

The train goes from underground, to raised lines and stations. This is one view from the station.

The river beside the train lines and walkways.

The Central Market.

Street art.

The Central Market is the place to buy souvenirs, things like batik shirts, scarves, fridge magnets etc.

Around the building are many small stalls and streets of little shops and cafes.

More street art.

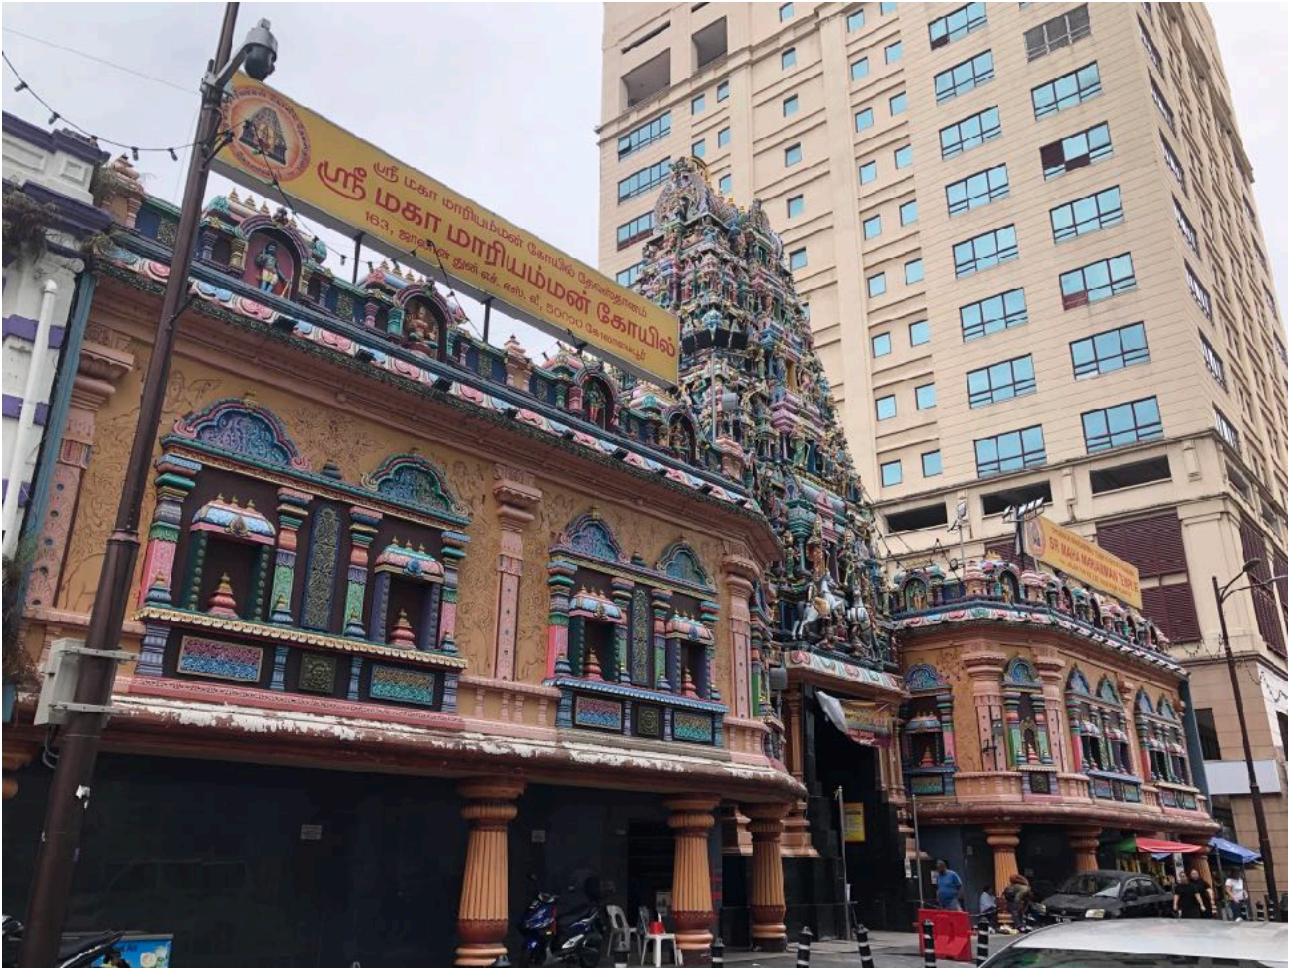

And some less than new buildings.

The entrance to Petaling Street (China Town and more street stalls).

It was a long morning of looking at things we didn't want to buy.

Hindu temple.

Interesting cafe.

More street art.

We stopped for Banh Mi and Vietnamese coffee at a little “hole in the wall” cafe in a side street.

We walked back to the station, bought our train tickets and caught the train back to the station near our hotel... easy as.

Our hotel from the street.

We went out early for tea and could order the Malay staples of Nasi Lemak Ayam and beef rendang. That dark red sambal is hot!

Then we walked over to the Twin Towers again.

They are iconic buildings.

This is underneath the Ombak Shopping Centre.

It is our last evening in Kuala Lumpur.

